The New York money market has been very much relieved within the last ten days. On one day last week the Bank of the Commonwealth paid out $10,500,000 in currency, representing disbursements by the Eric clique. This money appears to have since remained in circulation, and has, of course, contributed very materially to the relief of the market. The last bank statement shewed an increase of $4,250,000 in legal tenders, and a gain of about $3,000,000 in the relief of the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve; and it is to be expected that the reserve is an interest is the reserve; and it is to be expected that the release from hoard of the $10,500,000 above alluded to will cause a very marked improvement in the bank return to be made up to-day. The revelations in court of the doings of the Erie olique show that they have been holding out of circulation $15,000,000 of money; and it would seem that, at present, the and it would seem that, at present, the Liverpool sack coarse $2.50 on levee in lobe; $1.50 on levee in lobe; tion. This addition to the loanable resources of the banks has caused an entire cessation of usurious rates for money. On this subject the Economist says : From all we have passed through within the last four weeks, it is much to be hoped that the banks and the fluspelal and commercial interests generally will see the necessity of making an imperative demand upon Congress for an early modification of the national banking laws. so as to provide ad-quate elasticity for the currency.
